NANCY VALLADARES | IMAGE METABOLISMS

Southern Alberta Art Gallery, Lethbridge. To Mar 28

Nancy Valladares' first solo exhibition explores connections between photography and fossil fuels. Framing coal as "buried sunshine," the exhibition traces how ancient plant life, transformed through heat and pressure, underpins both extractive economies and photographic processes. Through materials such as bitumen, asphalt, metal plates, soil, sound and lavender oil, Valladares reveals the hidden chemical and corporate systems enabling visual culture. Referencing early heliography and coal extraction in Alberta, her evocative work links image-making to combustion, extraction and colonial erasure.

ELISE RASMUSSEN: AN ALPINE TRILOGY

Whyte Museum of the Canadian Rockies, Banff. To Apr 12

This exhibition brings together three interconnected bodies of work rooted in alpine history, imagery and myth. Through research-driven, lens-based practices, Elise Rasmussen re-examines narratives of conquest, climate and nostalgia tied to the French and Swiss Alps. The works explore the symbolism of blue and early scientific attempts to measure the sky, historical climate disruption and its cultural echoes, and the Alps as sites of healing, escape and tourism. Together, they question how mountains are seen, remembered and idealized over time.

Pudlo Pudlat: Art Is Life

ESPLANADE ARTS & HERITAGE CENTRE, Medicine Hat AB – To March 7

Pudlo Pudlat, Untitled, 1977/78, coloured pencil, ink

by Lissa Robinson

In Pudlo Pudlat: Art Is Life, brightly coloured airplanes soar above spear-wielding hunters moving across frozen tundra. With the planes' noses pointed skyward, their curvaceous forms bulge at the cockpit and taper at the tail, suggesting the bending, leaping motion of fish. Such imaginative juxtapositions are featured in a touring retrospective that celebrates the remarkable contribution of Pudlo Pudlat (1916–1992) to the development of Inuit art while foregrounding his distinctive storytelling and illustrative practice.

Across the exhibition, traditional practices of hunting and fishing coexist with helicopters, power lines and satellite dishes, forming visual narratives that reflect adaptation as much as disruption. His white surfaces evoke arctic ice, snow and sky, holding both real and imagined space while revealing Pudlat's attentiveness to the world around him.

Before emerging as an artist, Pudlat was a semi-nomadic hunter and fisherman along the southwest coast of Baffin Island. In the 1950s, he moved to Kaktuuq, where he met James Houston, who introduced the community to printmaking. In 1960, an injury led him to shift from carving to drawing, printmaking and painting. His experiences on the land and sea shaped the way he observed the world, giving him a perspective that blends traditional life with modern technology and imagination.

Pudlat's genius lies in how he balances observation with invention. Tilted horizons and flattened planes transform the Arctic into a space where multiple stories unfold. Subtle distortions and playful curves give familiar objects—planes, boats, helicopters—a surprising, graphic quality. Open white space and carefully chosen colours guide the eye across each composition, letting viewers move intuitively between the real and fantastical. Humour, rhythm and inventive perspective combine to make each drawing meticulously observed yet wonderfully alive.

Pudlat's work personifies the spirit of the North, reflecting a personal vision while belonging to a diverse and ever-evolving continuum of Inuit artistic practice. Through inventive narratives, playful distortions and layered compositions, he captures the coexistence of traditional and non-traditional technologies, leaving viewers with a vivid sense of the Arctic and the enduring creativity of Inuit art.

A FOREST OF COEXISTENCE: EUNNA OH

Art Gallery of St Albert, St. Albert. Feb 5 – Mar 14

Eunna Oh, Mushroom Series 6, 2025

This evocative exhibition explores the forest as a living, liminal space shaped by memory, culture and ancestry. Rooted in Korean spirituality, Eunna Oh views all elements of the forest as interconnected and ensouled. She transforms photos from across Alberta and BC through stitching, paint and screen printing, tracing mushrooms, mountains and unseen rhythms. Seasonal cycles of life, death and renewal guide the work. The exhibition reminds viewers that humans belong within nature, sharing responsibility for a future of coexistence and mutual care. artgalleryofstalbert.ca

HEATHER LEIER: PRACTICE PINNY

Nickle Galleries, Calgary. Feb 6 – Apr 30

Heather Leier, Patchwork (little)

Heather Leier's exhibition centres on printmaking as an embodied practice informed by physical gestures, tools and studio rituals. Repetition emerges across quilt-like prints, patchwork forms and soft sculpture, functioning as a stabilizing force amid everyday anxiety and dissonance. Quilt references point to feminized practices of reuse and invisible labour, foregrounding care. Humour and play recur, most clearly in a printed pickleball court that exposes the performative nature of institutional care. Throughout, labour and creative practice are valued and their commodification questioned. nickle.ucalgary.ca

Ongoing Nicola Harwood I It Will Hurt Less if You Relax reflects on the uneasy terrain of adulthood—where conviction gives way to adaptation, and struggle does not always yield the reward we expect. Rooted in the landscapes and mythologies of the Okanagan and Kootenays, these paintings place human and animal figures within environments shaped by resilience, risk and transformation. Drawing on trickster logic, religious iconography and moments of quiet connection, Harwood's work considers how meaning often emerges only after disruption, inviting viewers to reflect on survival not as victory, but as recalibration.

SLUG EGGS: BREE APPERLEY

Kamloops Art Gallery (The Cube), Kamloops. To May 2

While many artists assume 21st-century digital technologies to be neutral extensions of their bodies, it is refreshing to see those, particularly younger ones like Bree Apperley, take on such assumptions in their work. Her latest exhibition, an installation of repurposed objects and photographs, proposes an alternative reality critical of, in her words, "the torturous inanity of house-flipping grey paint and cyber trucks." Like the Arte Povera movement of the 1960s, Apperley makes a case for the importance of human interaction over mindless mediation.

Rita Leistner, Sally Enns, 2017, pigment print on Hahnemühle Photo Silk Baryta Paper flush mounted to Aluminum Composite Panel

by Michael Turner

It is an irony not lost on North Americans alert to the consequences of colonization's transformation of the natural landscape: how the unsustainable extraction of forest timber by earlier generations of loggers laid the groundwork for more recent generations of tree planters. Sunshine Coast author Charlotte Gill's Eating Dirt: Deep Forests, Big Timber, and Life with the Tree-Planting Tribe (2011) brought this passage to light in words; Scarborough-born artist and documentary filmmaker Rita Leistner has done something similar, but in pictures.

Organized by the McMichael Canadian Art Collection and curated by the McMichael's John Geoghegan, The Tree Planters is a series of large-scale photographic portraits of tree planters at work on variable terrain, from land broken and cluttered from past logging and forest fires to lush and welcoming idylls. Unlike the Early Renaissance, when portraits were commissioned by idle subjects to flaunt their possessions, Leistner's subjects are pictured in action, demonstrating their wealth in its commodified form, as labour.

Notable in Leistner's portraits is the sense that her subjects are not numb workers driven to reach their quotas, but human beings with rich lives for whom planting is as much a life-style as it is a job. Both pleasure and determination can be seen in Russell Robertson (2017), where the subject appears closer to a 17th-century buccaneer than a planter leaping over a fallen fir. In Sally Enns (2017), the viewer is given a range of contrasting signifiers to work with, from a leather-tough, dirt-smudged body to the pink-handled shovel and the Beatrix Potter bunny tattooed above the subject's well-developed forearm. Real people, doing back-breaking work.

Nanaimo Art Gallery, Nanaimo. To Mar 22

Conceived in response to the histories and legacies of Nanaimo's Chinatowns, this exhibition takes its title from the city's third Chinatown, as described in Denise Chong's 1995 memoir The Concubine's Children: Portrait of a Family. Though the title refers to Chong's description, co-curators Jesse Birch and Imogene Lim extend the observation to account for the fading and incomplete nature of memories, historical documents and photographs. Blankets, coppers, canoes, prints, mugs, trade beads and devil's club strung into necklaces all become carriers of law, memory and relation to one another. The title NDN Giver reclaims a phrase rooted in colonialism that mocked Indigenous generosity. In reality, the practice of giving upheld in the potlatch reflects the complexity of responsibilities in Indigenous governance and exchange. To give is to strengthen ties, and to receive is to take on the responsibility of carrying them forward. This exhibition marks the solo curatorial debut of BRG's Assistant Curator, Amelia Rea (Haida).

The latest private collection to be showcased at the Griffin belongs to Montreal's Lillian and Billy Mauer. It features over 40 works in painting, sculpture and photography by artists such as Carrie May Weems, Lorraine O'Grady, John Baldessari, Rosemarie Trockel, Doug Aitken, Tatiana Trouvé, Huma Bhabha, Frank Bowling, Betty Goodwin and Annette Messager. Though much of the Mauer Collection is focused on political and socially engaged content, Montreal-based curator Lesley Johnstone has selected works that represent the breadth of the collection.

IAN STONE: A SEAT AT THE TABLE

Bau-Xi Gallery, Vancouver. Feb 7 – 21

Montreal-based Ian Stone's high-realist oil-on-linen works draw on the signs and symbols of genre painting to explore queer memory, camp and the aesthetics of collecting. Using acquired and received materials, Stone positions painting as a platform for archival imagining, where objects take the place of histories shaped by desire, longing and exclusion. Like many contemporary painters, Stone's work is informed by art history, both as a reference guide and as a critical enterprise. A Seat at the Table marks the artist's debut exhibition in Vancouver.

Ongoing North by Northwest: an Indigenous exploration across Canada featuring First Nations artists from the Arctic and Pacific Northwest. Inuit peoples were nomadic by nature and traveled great distances for hunting purposes and building their igloos wherever necessary to live off the land. Whereas Indigenous groups on British Columbia's west coast built great cedar longhouses to reside for generations. Combined, they demonstrated a diversity of lifestyles and cultural distinctions that are apparent in their present art forms. They share artistic influences in depicting animals and mythological figures as well as utilizing materials local to their region. By bringing these two groups together, the gallery's collection illustrates how two distinctive communities can share commonalities between their similarities and differences.

From Far and Wide: The Soundscapes

TWO RIVERS GALLERY, Prince George BC – Feb 6 – April 5

Mathieu Léger, From Here to There to Here, 2022–present, performance drawings on Fabriano paper

by Michael Turner

Songs and sound works continue to wind their way through contemporary art galleries and museums, adding dimension to what was once a wholly visual experience. Two Rivers Gallery is no different. As the exhibition title suggests, sonic offerings cover a range of territory—in this instance, the Pacific and Atlantic coasts of North America. Like the confluence of the Fraser and Nechako Rivers (after which the gallery is named), these coasts, once merged, conceive an impossible space only reachable by sound.

Artists Mathieu Léger, Ian Foster and Anju Singh each work in and through a range of media and sonic genres. Of the three, Léger, a finalist for the 2024 Sobey Art Award, is most familiar to visual art audiences for his drum kit-driven performance drawings. In one example, the artist attached graphite to a cymbal. With each strike, a mark was made on an adjacent, vertically aligned piece of paper. For his impression works, the paper is struck directly with a drumstick. As for the drumstick, Léger devised a performance where, through successive rimshots, he wore down the middle of a number of drumsticks, to the point where their frayed sections, once aligned, came to resemble the drawings he made with his cymbals.

For Foster, his is a journey that, like fellow ambient enthusiast Brian Eno, evolved from being a singer-songwriter in the popular idiom to a “crossover classical” artist who, through scoring films, began to make films of his own. Similarly, Singh’s journey took her from multi-instrumental mastery and direct study with composers to an interdisciplinary composition-centred practice that, in her words, “engages in a practice of deconstruction and re-animation as process-based methods.”

That Green Ideal: Emily Carr and the Idea of Nature

VANCOUVER ART GALLERY, Vancouver BC – Feb 6 – Nov 8

Emily Carr, Loggers' Culls, 1935, oil on canvas.

Those familiar with Carr's paintings will recognize how her modelling of form led her beyond the Northwest Coast totem poles she sought to document and deeper into their biological source material—the abstracted, torqued forests of the 1930s and '40s. Though Carr is best known for these swirling, shimmering forests, her solo trees best express the balance between formal interests (her monochromatic Grey, from 1929–30, inspired by her visit to Georgia O'Keeffe's New York studio) and social concerns (the clear-cut known as Scorned as Timber, Beloved of the Sky, 1935).

In the words of exhibition curator Richard Hill, "What interests me is the extent to which Carr was not, intellectually speaking, alone in the forest as she conceived these works. I want to tease out the tension between the artist's desire for direct communion with nature and the larger history of cultural and artistic ideas that she drew on."

vanartgallery.bc.ca

by Michael Turner

This exhibition, the gallery's largest presentation of work by Victoria-born artist, writer and educator Emily Carr (1871–1945) in over two decades, comprises mostly paintings drawn from the VAG's Emily Carr Collection, with an emphasis this time on Carr's idea of nature as its "sole subject." Taking its title from the artist's journal entry of June 30, 1931, That Green Ideal explores this subject both in form and in content, providing insight into Carr's method and process.

She writes: "Find the forms you desire to express your purpose. When you have succeeded in getting them as near as you can to express your idea, never leave them but push further on and on[,] strengthening and emphasizing those forms to enclose that green idea or ideal."

practices through the technologies of today, Jaad Kuujus's art moves between generations, time, place and mediums. Beyond the creation of replicas, her interconnected digital and material practice gives rise to descendant works – woven embodiments of kinship with the belongings, materials and ancestors that inspire them. Embodying repetition as a form of discipline and devotion, each stitch marks cycles of regeneration and return: to teachings, ancestral knowledge, and belonging within self and community. Museum of Vancouver, Vancouver. To Nov 8

For this touring exhibition, Vancouver-based photojournalist Kayla Isomura asked more than 80 fourth- and fifth-generation Japanese Canadians and Americans, "What would you pack if you were forcibly removed from your home today?" The impetus for this affecting portraiture exhibit is the 1942 forcible internment of 23,000 Japanese Canadians and over 100,000 Japanese Americans from the west coast to interior encampments after Imperial Japan's attack on Pearl Harbor. In addition to the portraits, the exhibition features video interviews and contextual documents.

Remembering Gathie Falk, 1928–2025

by Robin Laurence

Gathie Falk, who was born in rural Manitoba in 1928 and died in her long-time Vancouver home this past December, was one of Canada's most original and beloved artists. She was late coming to her true vocation, her early life scored by poverty, displacement and discouraging setbacks, but also sustained by deep wells of hard work, resourcefulness and Mennonite faith. It wasn't until she was into her 30s that she was able to undertake serious art studies and to define her creative identity, shaping a body of work that was once described as "the veneration of the ordinary."

With her imaginative weaving together of funk ceramics, mixed-media installations and groundbreaking performance works, Falk emerged in the late 1960s and early 1970s as a distinctive member of Vancouver's interdisciplinary art scene. In subsequent decades, she developed and maintained a prolific studio-based practice. Her ceramic and later papier-mâché sculptures and her semi-abstract paintings transformed overlooked aspects of the everyday—piles of fruit at the corner grocer, window displays of shoes and boots, laurel hedges and concrete sidewalks, wooden chairs and dangling lightbulbs, women's dresses, men's shirts, monogrammed ball caps, fallen leaves—into markers of familiarity and strangeness, presence and absence, radiant life and shadowy death. With her series of large oil paintings, such as Night Skies and Pieces of Water, Falk employed lightly washed surfaces of colour and gesture to meditate on the beauty that graces our daily lives.

Over the years, I was privileged to interview Gathie at length, working with her on two exhibition catalogues and on her memoir, Apples, etc. And here I am now, trying to describe what made her art so moving and transformative. Predictably, her passing has occasioned multiple tributes, some lengthy, others (like this one) regrettably short, but all attempting to sum up her creative essence. I'm left believing that no obituary, no catalogue essay, no review or article or even personal memoir can adequately convey what an exceptional artist and remarkable being Gathie Falk was. The best we can do is bid her farewell while cherishing what she left behind.

Goodbye, dear Gathie. And thank you.

Jaad Kuujus: Everyone Says I Look Like My Mother

MUSEUM OF ANTHROPOLOGY AT UBC, Vancouver BC – To March 29

by Julie Chadwick

Mountain goat wool weaves through much of the debut exhibition of Jaad Kuujus (Meghann O'Brien) at UBC's Museum of Anthropology, which consists of more than a dozen of the artist's weavings and their digital translations. It shows up in Everyone Says I Look Like My Mother (2020), the show's titular piece. O'Brien used white threads of hand-spun wool and yellow cedar bark to weave a T-shirt that she says plays on the tension of making a typically commercial product out of a sacred medium.

The wool is also present in Clouds (2010), a display of delicate hand-twisted yarn that offers a window into how the fibre is spun from raw fleece, a skill O'Brien learned from apprenticeships with master Ts'msyen weaver Tsamiianbaan (William White) and Haida/Kootenay artist SGaan Jaad (Sherri Dick), among others. It was under White's guidance that O'Brien, who is of Haida, Kwakw'wakw and Irish descent, created The Spirit of Shape (2015–18), a spectacular recreation of a Naaxiin (Chilkat) apron. Woven from cedar bark and cashmere, the piece references European contact on the Northwest Coast, with the two sides representing pre- and post-contact, and is a "reclamation of the belonging's spirit," according to the museum's statement.

The wool then takes on new shape as a machine-woven textile in O'Brien's piece The Burden of Being an Echo (2025): five digital-jacquard robes based on two earlier works, Sky Blanket and its digital representation Wrapped in the Cloud, which was a media installation created in collaboration with Simon Fraser University's Making Culture Lab. The Burden of Being an Echo, woven at the historic textile factory EE Labels in the Netherlands, transmediates new digital representations of Sky Blanket into the digital-jacquard woven robes currently on display.

O'Brien, who co-curated the exhibit with associate professors Hannah Turner (UBC) and Kate Hennessy (SFU), chose to display the works in a circular shape on curved pink textile walls, a move that she says "encourages a relational rather than hierarchical understanding of the works." She adds that the curved space evokes the "themes of repetition, regeneration, and return at the heart of the exhibition."

The Chromophiliacs

RICHMOND ART GALLERY, Richmond BC – To April 4

by Michael Turner

Curator Zoë Chan of the Richmond Art Gallery has assembled a group exhibition of 10 local and international artists working in and through a variety of media and cultural practices, with an emphasis on colour. The title is an antidotal, if not dialectical, response to David Batchelor's book Chromophobia (2000), in which the Scottish-born artist and writer argues how "in the West, since Antiquity, colour has been systematically marginalized, reviled, diminished and degraded."

Among the works featured are Moozhan Ahmadzadegan's screen print Ruth Paul's Drag Race: Iran (2025), in which the artist extends the 13th-century Persian miniature painting style to include a show-stopping drag sequence that, in Ahmadzadegan's homeland, would have its contestants arrested, if not worse. For Ovoid Soundings (2022–24), Charlene Vickers presents an equally colourful wall-mounted murmuration of felted "hybrid ovoids." At the gallery entrance is a futuristic title wall by Cuban artist Yaimel López Zaldívar, who has contributed an experimental artist's book, entitled Ciudad, as well.

Also included are works by Diyan Achjadi and Jan Wade, with commissions by Maru Aponte, Sandeep Johal, Laura Meza Orozco, Osvaldo Ramirez Castillo and Malina Sintnicolaas.

As with past exhibitions here, visitors have a bounty of public programs to choose from. There is a papermaking workshop led by Maru Aponte (Feb 16, 12 to 4 pm), an exhibition tour in Mandarin (Feb 21, 2 to 3 pm), an artist talk and workshop with Charlene Vickers (Feb 28, 1 to 3 pm) and an artist talk with Jan Wade, to be held at Emily Carr University's Reliance Theatre (March 30, 5 pm).

Host Bryce Snyder interviews journalist Teagan Carroll about a break-in at the Trutch Seed Bank, revealing the Plot Corps used AI imagery to avoid detection. Yongzhen Li: Structures of the unsaid

SIDNEY AND GERTRUDE ZACK GALLERY, Vancouver BC – March 4 – April 13

Yongzhen Li, Betrayed Him and the Fate of Becoming Him, 2024, rice paper, ink mugwort

by Michael Turner

Yongzhen Li's delicate paintings stand in contrast to the psychological and symbolic violence inherent in their subject matter. For Li, this violence is baked into an age-old Chinese patriarchal culture that continues to shape notions of identity, gender and emotional conformity. In response, Li produces paintings that would be counter-narratives if they weren't so open-ended, existing in that liminal space between resistance and confrontation.

Stylistically, Li's work begins within the traditions of Chinese painting, which employs ink, brush, xuan paper and mugwort dye as its material base. Those familiar with xuan paper will know there is no erasure, a constraint that parallels the social conditioning Li is at odds with. But with every constraint there is a liberty, and Li finds this in the brush itself, how its flexibility allows for subtle depictions of internalized emotions, that which can't be seen, only felt. As for recurrent motifs, Li favours fragmented bodies, scarred trees, crossed arms, kneeling figures and dogs.

An exemplary work is Betrayed Him and the Fate of Becoming Him (2025). Here, a child in pyjamas points an accusatory finger at an older man, presumably his father, who has the body of a tiger and is dressed in a Speedo with a scarf knotted below his chin. The father's fist is raised, but it is not directed at the boy. At level with the man is a woman, rendered lightly in the Western style. She is lying across a chesterfield, her back to us, a towel covering her midsection. Is she in pain? Or is she bracing for it? Bracketing the scene are trees and what could be boulders, the largest of which looks on, balefully.

DREAMTIME: THE PAINTINGS OF PIERRE COUPEY

Gallery Jones, Vancouver. To Feb 28

The title of this exhibition alludes to the Australian Aboriginal concept of creation, spirit and temporal and spatial return. Though dreamtime is foundational to Aboriginal cosmology, Pierre Coupey finds in its holism a method to direct and build his paintings. Unlike his earlier abstracted landscapes, often based on three horizontal bands of colour, these more recent works draw on a range of techniques, including taping, stencilling and overpainting. And where early works were subdued, these paintings are alive with fire.

FEI DISBROW: THE FAMILIAR UNFAMILIAR

West Vancouver Art Museum, West Vancouver. To Feb 28

Fei Disbrow's exhibition stems from an interest in out-of-the-way places and the miniature organisms that inhabit them. Here she investigates the cryptogram, an age-old plant that is flowerless, seedless and, like fungi, reproduces through spores. Disbrow photographs the organism and prints the image onto metal before cutting out a shape that belongs more to the artist's intuition than the outline of the organism. The pieces are then bent to reflect the cryptogram's undulating topology or mounted onto panels, as collage.

To Feb 28 Fei Disbrow: The Familiar Unfamiliar explores the rich, often-overlooked world of cryptograms—mosses, lichens, and algae—through Disbrow's sculptural work. To turn down the noise of daily life, the artist seeks out-of-the-way places where she observes and records unfamiliar, miniature lifeforms which are integral to this body of her work. Opening Mar 14 Marian Penner Bancroft: Long Story is multimedia installation that brings together photographs, videos, wall texts and sound. It opens space for deep contemplation, and highlights the interconnectedness of histories, places and people, while embracing complexity. By engaging multiple senses and mediums, Bancroft encourages viewers to reflect on their own relationships with memory, land and belonging.

Paul Walde: Weather Conditions

UVIC LEGACY ART GALLERY DOWNTOWN, Victoria BC – To April 11

Paul Walde, Of Weather (for Geoff Hendricks), 2018

by Michael Turner

Trained as a painter, artist Paul Walde's interdisciplinary practice has evolved over the past 30 years to include musical composition, performance, video and installation, with a focus on environmental issues. His site-specific performances are staged in the natural environment and meticulously documented. From these documents Walde fashions audiovisual installations that cover a range of topics, including global warming, deforestation, land use and endangered species.

Curated by Carolyn Butler Palmer, associate professor of art history and visual studies and Williams Legacy Chair at the University of Victoria, Weather Conditions features two installations, both homages to important 20th-century artists, both focused on water-based natural phenomena—a lake in the first instance, clouds in the second.

For Tom Thomson Centennial Swim (2017), Walde, accompanied by a brass band canoe flotilla, swam the length of Algonquin Provincial Park's Canoe Lake on the 100th anniversary of the Canadian landscape painter's mysterious death by drowning; for Of Weather (for Geoff Hendricks) (2018–24), Walde choreographed an “image movement” inspired by the work of the noted Fluxus artist (nickname “Cloudsmith”) that had teams of performer/art handlers carry large-scale stretched photographic prints of clouds throughout the Southdown Industrial Area of Mississauga, Ontario, an active manufacturing zone.

Weather Conditions includes two “live” performances. On Saturday, Feb 28 at 2 pm, the exhibition's pictures will be activated by a new team of performer/art handlers, based on motion picture camera movement and techniques. On Saturday, March 28 at 2 pm, a second activation will be accompanied by a string quartet rendition of the Of Weather music score.

brings together the past and present by examining historic death rituals alongside emerging contemporary practices. The exhibit highlights artists and death workers who engage with mortality in thought-provoking ways- challenging taboos while honoring traditions and the deceased. It invites viewers to reconsider how we engage with death, how we honor those who came before us, and how art can offer a bridge between the living and the departed. By confronting death, we do not diminish life, rather, we enrich it. This exhibition seeks to open space for dialogue, reflection, and perhaps even a reimagining of our relationship with the inevitable, transforming fear into understanding and loss into legacy.

WASHINGTONAISHA HARRISON: POROUS BODYBainbridge Island Museum of Art, Bainbridge Island. To Feb 22*

For her first solo museum exhibition, Olympia-based Aisha Harrison brings a striking collection of figurative works in ceramics, bronze, paper collage and mixed media. Focusing on individuals within her African American community, Harrison transmutes their realistic features into mythic fantasies, bolstering latent spiritual power and mysterious presence. Maternal ancestors are invoked alongside inverted tree stumps, abstracted human body parts and wall-mounted masks. Harrison has created a richly tactile world in which nature interacts with and grounds humanity. biartmuseum.org

The One-Two Punch: 100 Years of Robert Colescott

TACOMA ART MUSEUM, Tacoma WA – To March 29

Robert Colescott, Self Portrait—Paris, 1949–50, crayon on paper. Collection of the Jordan Schnitzer Family Foundation

by Matthew Kangas

The celebrated African American artist Robert Colescott (1925–2009) spent substantial amounts of time in the Pacific Northwest before settling permanently in Tucson, Arizona. He grew up in Oakland, California, son of musician parents who had moved west at the start of the Great Migration. After serving in World War II, he studied at the University of California, Berkeley, and, prior to his 1952 MFA, with French Cubist master Fernand Léger in Paris. The emerging artist then spent time in Seattle, where he befriended artist Norman Lundin and taught at Queen Anne High School.

As we see in the centennial exhibition at Tacoma Art Museum, from the mid-1970s, Colescott examined in depth African and African American history with great humor, bitterness and satire in extravagantly colored canvases that often reconfigured masterpieces of European art, replacing white female nudes with Black, and stuffy white men with swaggering Black antiheroes. For example, Emanuel Leutze's Washington Crossing the Delaware (1851) becomes Colescott's George Washington Carver Crossing the Delaware: Page from an American History Textbook (1975). Visitors to Tacoma can easily trace the stylistic evolution of the artist's figurative works, which call on Renaissance painting, Surrealism, Abstract Expressionism and Pop Art.

With his move to Portland and his first show at the Fountain Gallery in 1963, Colescott's career began to take off. Time he spent in Egypt was formative. He said: "I was influenced by the narrative form of Egyptian art, by 3,000 years of a 'non-white' art tradition, and by living in a culture that is strictly 'non-white.' I think that excited me about some other things, some of the ideas about race and culture in our own country; I wanted to say something about it." For his powerful, large-scale paintings focusing on racial themes, he is now considered a forerunner of the 1980s art movement Neo-Expressionism.

Having gained recognition with his bold reinvention of history painting, Colescott had his first retrospective in 1987, a traveling show organized by San Jose Museum of Art director John Olbrantz, also from the Northwest. In 1997, Colescott became the first African American artist to represent the United States at the Venice Biennale.

JOSEPH BENVENUTO: TRANSLUCENT LEGACY // CONVERSATIONS IN GLASS, FRIENDSHIP & PRACTICE

Traver Gallery, 100 W Ewing St, Seattle. To Feb 28

Teachers, assistants and studio masters matter a great deal in the world of glass art, considering it is almost exclusively a result of teamwork. It is appropriate that friends and colleagues of the late Joseph BenVenuto (1963–2017) have worked with Traver to create a memorial exhibition that features Joe's work as well as that of 13 associates. A 30-page catalog with an essay by critic John Drury and correspondence with Dick Weiss is available.

WORLDS SEEN AND UNSEEN: PAINTINGS BY GARY FAIGIN

Harris Harvey Gallery, Seattle. Feb 5 – 28

It's not often that an art critic is able to sustain a career as an artist, not to mention co-found an art school along the lines of the Art Students League of New York (the Gage Academy of Art), but that is what the late Gary Faigin (1950–2025) achieved. Harris Harvey gives viewers a chance to survey Faigin's fantastical oeuvre, including his surrealist paintings bordering on science-fiction illustration, immaculate still lifes, and implausible landscapes with steam locomotive trains.

Eric-Paul Riege: ojo | - | ólq̣

HENRY ART GALLERY, Seattle WA – March 14 – Oct 25

by Susan Kunimatsu

Eric-Paul Riege is descended from generations of Diné weavers and trained in their traditional techniques. His work both builds on and toys with those traditions, challenging what we perceive as precious or authentic. His largest solo exhibition to date, ojo | - | ólq̣ was jointly developed by the Bell Gallery at Brown University and the Henry Art Gallery at the University of Washington. Riege spent two years doing research at Brown's Haffenreffer Museum of Anthropology and Washington's Burke Museum of Natural History, mining their collections of Navajo art to create work for this exhibition.

Riege considers himself part of a living tradition that is both a continuum and a community. His home and studio are in the same family compound where he grew up, in Na'nízhoozhí (Gallup, New Mexico), bordering the Navajo reservation. Family members taught him to weave and sew, and they still play active roles in his artistic practice. He regards the people who make his materials as part of his creative process, whether they are shepherds and hand spinners or factory workers and shippers.

But the artworks themselves upend the tropes of Native American art. Jewelry, beading and weaving patterns are reproduced in monumental sculptures of unexpected materials such as synthetic yarn and fake fur. Many are suspended from the ceiling and none have individual titles, so the exhibition can be experienced as a single immersive environment. Riege also uses live performance as a medium through which he and his audience can interact with his work. Performances by Riege and guest artists will occur during the exhibition's run.

ojo | - | ólq̣ includes artifacts from the Burke collection and Riege's personal archive, creating a conversation between past and present, real and fake. "A lot of my work is this interplay of questioning and celebration," Riege has said. For each exhibition, he reconfigures existing works. Pieces are neither the same nor completely new, but in a sense alive and evolving. His use of soft materials and exaggerated scale makes the pieces accessible and approachable. But it also raises questions about how we attribute value or authenticity to materials and objects.

CLAUDE ZERVAS: POND WATER

Western Gallery, Western Washington University, Bellingham. To Mar 21

Originally from Bellingham, Claude Zervas has exhibited widely, including in Toronto, and in Vancouver, BC, at Western Front. Blending processes derived from digital mechanisms with traditional studio materials like paint and wood, Zervas' recent work at the Western Gallery suggests natural imagery such as tree rings, pond ripples and algae. Supplementing his permanent video installation, Nooksack Middle Fork (2015), in the Performing Arts Center lobby, Pond Water displays new explorations of how nature is experienced through the lens of technology.

Ongoing Kids Design Glass: The First Generation features 50 of the first Kids Design Glass sculptures. Beyond its unique appearance, a Kids Design Glass piece embraces the symbiotic relationship between designer and glassblower in a new way. Without a technical understanding of the constraints of glass as a medium, these child-designers challenge the Hot Shop Team to explore new kinds of precision that requires the abandonment of glassblowing norms. Field Notes:

Artists Observe Nature references the practice of natural historians to record observations encountered while actually being in nature. The works on display show how the innately curious exhibiting artists have trained their prodigious skills in glass to honor the natural world.

"WE WERE ALL LIVING A DREAM": REFLECTIONS ON TWENTIETH-CENTURY LESBIAN FEMINISM THROUGH THE PHOTOGRAPHY OF DONNA POLLACH

Oregon Historical Society Museum, 1200 SW Park Ave, Portland. To Mar 29

From the early 1970s, for 30 years, artist Donna Pollach photographed the feminist and lesbian women of Portland in both public displays and quiet domestic moments. Her work "captured intimate moments among women as they worked together to deconstruct and redefine conventional ideas and expectations of womanhood, family, motherhood, and relationships," according to the OHS. Fellow activist Ellen Goldberg noted Pollach's "blend of gritty-real people doing almost surreal groundbreaking that reflected our lesbian community in that moment of history."

Oregon Society of Artists, Portland. Figures Feb 5 – 26, Portraits Mar 5 – 26

The gallery attached to this art school, at 2185 SW Park Place, is a great place to sample what amateur and semiprofessional artists are doing. As artificial intelligence gets better at rendering human forms, portrait and figure painting is at a similar inflection point as when photography arrived in the late 19th century. In two successive exhibitions, these artists demonstrate what they can capture of the human body, in a way the robots cannot.

Ongoing Crow's Shadow Institute of the Arts Biennial features prints created by native and non-native artists at this important printmaking atelier on the Umatilla Reservation near Pendleton, Oregon over the past two years. Included are prints by Marwin Begaye, James Lavadour, Wendy Red Star and Dyani White Hawk, among others. To March 21 D.E. May: Postcards from Islandsale features 40 years of work by this highly-regarded Salem mixed media artist, who was born in Salem and spent his entire life here, referring to it as "Islandsale." It includes drawings and constructions made from found materials—cardboard, old maps, different types of paper, postcards, and stamps—and features artworks drawn from collections throughout the US.

OREGON

SIGNS OF DISSENT

Blackfish Gallery, Portland. Feb 4 – 28

The artist-activists of Blackfish are taking on "the reemergence of 20th-century specters of xenophobia and ultranationalist authoritarianism," according to the publicity. No prizes for guessing that this is about Trump and his followers, and images of "Old Glory" will feature plenty. The question is, does protest art change anything if it's in a gallery and not on the streets or online? And can it keep up with world events? At least galleries like Blackfish are quicker to react than museums and more commercial galleries. And it is hosting a month of talks, workshops and music about fighting the power. Save a chair for the FBI.

PROPHETS: PAINTINGS BY HILARY BAKER

High Desert Museum, 59800 South Highway 97, Bend. Feb 21 – Apr 26

A new series of paintings by Los Angeles painter Hilary Baker investigates the symbolism of moths. Often seen as omens of destruction and misfortune, moths have a dark beauty and a vital function as pollinators. Baker lost her home in the Palisades Fire of January 2025 and was inspired to see moths as spiritual messengers, "capable of transformations and navigating darkness." Her bright, lavish renderings of these nocturnal insects may prompt viewers to pay more attention to moths large and small.

D.E. May: Postcards from Islandsalem

HALLIE FORD MUSEUM OF ART, Willamette University, Salem OR – To March 21

by Joseph Gallivan

Mixed-media artist D.E. May (1952–2019) is commemorated in a large retrospective in the city synonymous with his work, Salem. His forms included collages, drawings, paintings, sculptures, templates, testbeds and mail art, among others. Independent curator Linda Tesner told Preview she knew May well and was amazed at his almost uncategorizable body of work.

“He’s really sui generis,” said Tesner. “Some people compare him to Joseph Cornell because he was a collage artist, and he legendarily loved Marcel Duchamp, but he was hardly a Dadaist. He admired Le Corbusier’s drawings, but he does not give you a toehold into art history.” The museum will host a free open house at May’s downtown Salem workshop (never “studio”; he did not think his art making was different from any trade) on Saturday, March 21, from noon to 4 pm. As Tesner shows in her catalog, The Art of D.E. May, the dimly lit space was a hoarder house of cardboard pigeonholes where May kept his paints, glue and scissors, and all the analog tools of his trade, such as set squares, wooden rulers and pencils.

A friend of blue-collar workers, the artist drank in local bars and at night walked the streets of Salem, where he would find scraps of paper and cardboard, often from the local paper mill. These he drew on, wrote on and painted on, and sometimes turned into small sculptures. Dan Earl May nicknamed the city “Islandsalem” for its insular nature and occasional river floods. He passed away in 2019 from pancreatic cancer, just as he was emerging onto the national art scene.

Tesner says May lived a modest life. For example, he didn’t get his first phone until about 2000, a landline. “For a lot of his life he didn’t have a car, he never had a computer, ever, and he only had a cellphone when he absolutely had to, because his oncologist needed to get ahold of him.” The artist spoke in riddles, such as “I look at much of what I do as preliminary and resolved simultaneously,” and his work resists usual critical inquiry.

“He has made me rethink my entire career as an artist historian.... He really had his very own style and way of working,” says Tesner.

Curator-led exhibition tours Feb 10 & March 10, 12:30pm

Panel discussion with May’s friends Feb 26, 7:30pm, Paulus Lecture Hall

PDX Contemporary Art in Portland will also show May’s work Feb 4–28
