Opening Nov 21 I AM: Indigenous Artist Mentorship features 13 Indigenous artists spanning nations, generations and career stages who created new work in response to The Ancestors Are Talking, a 2025 exhibition at The Whyte curated by Joseph M Sanchez, the last surviving member of the "Indigenous Group of Seven." For Sanchez, this was an opportunity to help foster the next generation of notable Indigenous artists in Canada in a year-long intensive mentorship program. Organized by the Whyte and curated by emerging Métis curator Emma De Sousa. Sitting Wind explores the work and legacy of Îethka (Stoney) artist Ganutha Îge (Sitting Wind), also known as Frank Kaquitts. It invites a reading of Sitting Wind's artistic career and quietly honours the various chapters of his life.

To Jan 3, 2027 Deployed: Canadian Army Reservists Overseas reveals realities faced by Canadian troops abroad, seen through artefacts and the lens of a feature-length documentary film including interviews with 48 serving and retired army reservists. The oral histories are boldly candid and articulate, countering prevalent myth-making whereby military deployments are often sanitized, ritualized, propagandized, and mythologized. For soldiers, overseas service is often transformational, sometimes traumatic, yet often unseen by the citizenry they serve. The Deployed film (2017) is made by Colonel Michael Vernon (Retired) and focusses on Alberta and the 41 Canadian Brigade Group: a timely look at Alberta's recent military history during an era of Canadian rearmament and increased global conflict.

Opening Jan 15 Snowpiercer brings together five Canadian artists–Ben Donoghue, Risa Horowitz, Robert Kautuk, Laura Millard and Han Sung-pil–whose photography, film and installation explore winter and Arctic landscapes as sites of ecological, cultural and political transformation. Their practices consider environments increasingly shaped by climate change, resource extraction, human intervention and geopolitical interests. From wildfire regeneration in the Rockies and fragile Arctic ecosystems to marine debris, industrial shipping and Inuit experiences of sea ice and seasonal change, the artists offer distinct perspectives on northern landscapes. The exhibition challenges perceptions of winter as empty or static, revealing instead landscapes shaped by history, knowledge, consequence and care. Curated by Tak Pham.

The liminal space through the wilderness in a commute. For a fleeting moment the light changes, and the familiar surroundings emote a sense of nostalgia, romanticism or déjà vu.
Opening Nov 26 Chris Flodberg: Signs and Symptoms Flodberg's newest exploration is a return to his highly detailed realist paintings. These new works contemplate the depth of meaning behind familiar objects otherwise dismissed as mundane.These artworks are dreamlike artifacts that have washed ashore after the storm. They depict the wreckage of one life and the seeds of another.

To Dec 12 Held. Together. Glenna Cardinal, seth cardinal dodging-horse, Dwayne Martineau and Amanda McCavour present work about the relationships that sustain life. Plants provide the curatorial point of departure, offering a way of noticing the connections between human and more-than-human life. Attending to the ecological intelligence of grassland species, the exhibition considers reciprocity and care. Situated in Guts-ists'i, Wîchîspa Oyade, Moh'kinstsis, where the Foothills Fescue and Foothills Parkland ecosystems meet, the exhibition explores relationships to land, family and community. Through textile, video and mixed media, the artists consider plants, place, kinship, displacement and belonging, inviting us to reflect on what it means to be held in relation. Curated by Jenelle M. Pasiechnik.

ROBIN SMITH-PECK – STILL HAUNTED
Wallace Galleries, Calgary. Nov 5 – 25
Recent paintings by Robin Smith-Peck capture the rugged terrain of the Canadian Shield in mesmerizing detail. Exposed bedrock, reflective bogs, and stands of birch and spruce evoke landscapes haunted by myth, memory and unseen forces. Far from static backdrops, her paintings are living scenes where a dark line of slender trees cuts across a dense forest floor stippled with lavender, rust and green. Exploring tensions between natural and imagined places, Still Haunted blends Smith-Peck's memory with the enduring spirit of the North. wallacegalleries.com

NATALIE GERBER: LOAD
Esker Foundation, Calgary. Nov 9, 2026 – Feb 21, 2027
Natalie Gerber's site-specific installation explores metamorphosis and cycles of becoming by combining ceramics and textiles to examine weight, gravity, texture and duration. On the floor, slip-cast ceramic forms suggest eggs, stones or celestial bodies, their surfaces revealing the gradual deterioration of their casting moulds. Suspended above, a laser-cut sculptural silk lattice expands from two dimensions into a three-dimensional shroud that slowly settles and shifts over time. Surface textures like the dimpled clay mirror how the human body is shaped by physical forces or time. eskerfoundation.art

Ongoing Footsteps Through Time: Human Journeys on the Land explores how movement has shaped human life in the Bow Valley for over 13,000 years. From the retreat of massive ice sheets that opened the first travel routes, to the enduring seasonal movements of Indigenous Peoples, visitors will discover how people have long navigated, understood, and lived in relationship with this landscape. Through interactive displays, archaeological evidence, and Indigenous ways of knowing, the exhibit reveals a rich story of connection - across time, distance, and cultures. Hands-on activities, artifacts, and storytelling invite visitors to follow ancient footsteps, uncover hidden histories, and reflect on their own journeys within a valley that has always been defined by movement.

ALBERTA – Lieutenant Governor of Alberta Arts Awards

Cree Métis interdisciplinary artist Lara Felsing received the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta Arts Award for Emerging Artist for 2026. Her material research and practice merge Indigenous teachings with Western knowledge to explore kinship with the land. Felsing's stunning material exploration includes stitched circular family portraits paired with long, bundled sweetgrass and hand-woven coiled baskets made with foraged materials. Using natural textiles and earth-toned washes, she depicts wildlife like elk navigating tactile, multi-layered terrains, utilizing upcycled community items and biodegradable materials to advocate for environmental care, reciprocity and survival. LR

Apparitions: Arturo Pianzola and Robert Pohl

HARCOURT HOUSE ARTIST RUN CENTRE, Edmonton AB – Jan 15 – Feb 27, 2027

Robert Pohl, Service Counter, 2024, silver gelatin print on fibre-based paper

by Lissa Robinson

Apparitions is a five-year collaborative project by Edmonton-based photographers Arturo Pianzola and Robert Pohl. This striking exhibition features 32 hand-printed photographs that evoke a human presence without depicting people. Their collective works hold a strange kind of beauty in how the abandoned or forgotten spaces conjure ghosts in the remnants left behind.

For Pianzola and Pohl, long-time collaborators and members of the Monochrome Guild—a collective focused on traditional film and printing techniques—the concept for the project emerged once they discovered a mutual interest in subjects marked by human absence.

While photography is often thought of in terms of single frames or independent practices, this project shows how the most compelling imagery matures through sustained, cumulative exploration. Curating their archives retrospectively allowed them to discover subtle patterns that bridged their distinct bodies of work into a unified and engaging dialogue.

Beyond a shared interest in absent bodies is a strict commitment to traditional processes. Using medium- and large-format cameras, Pianzola and Pohl capture images on black-and-white film, self-process the negatives, and hand-print them on silver gelatin paper in the darkroom. Rejecting digital alternatives, they embrace a tactile approach where technical craftsmanship and artistic vision are inseparable.

Arturo Pianzola, Two Vases, 2026, silver gelatin print on fiber-based paper

In Pohl's Hudson (2022), a decaying vintage automobile rests upside down among trees, prompting questions about the driver who left it behind. Similarly, his photo titled Service Counter (2024) stirs the imagination with a dust-covered vintage cash machine, stacked oil filter boxes, and automotive catalogues left in disarray. Pianzola offers a parallel journey in Table and Broom (2021), where a solitary straw broom is left in a dilapidated room with scattered newspapers. In Two Vases (2026), two glass vessels cast shadows through a grime-streaked window where light eerily glows from within.

In each of these scenarios, what is missing matters just as much as what is framed. Ultimately, Apparitions functions like a window; the views are poignant and masterfully composed, but they are only fully realized when the viewer's own imagination brings the scene into focus.

Southern Alberta Art Gallery, Lethbridge. To Nov 14
Artists Rachael Chaisson and Rita McKeough consider two of Alberta's distinct aquatic ecosystems—ephemeral prairie ghost ponds and the Rocky Mountain headwaters of the Eastern Slopes. Their peer-mentorship exhibition combines interactive sculpture, electronic media, sound and video, allowing visitors to listen directly to the region's species in a changing environment. Chaisson's textile installation features floating video field recordings activated by a pond-shaped bed, while McKeough's animated floor projections and bird models broadcast a mourning chorus of bull trout and Clark's nutcrackers pleading for human solidarity. saag.ca

WHAT SHAPES US
Art Gallery of Alberta, Edmonton. To Mar 28, 2027
This multi-generational exhibition investigates Indigenous abstraction as a dynamic, evolving visual language rooted in pattern and repetition. Spanning textiles, sculpture, beadwork, carving and installations, the show features diverse practices and nations through works by Wally Dion, Bob Boyer, Renee Condo, Brian Jungen and others. These artists layer, weave and assemble repeated gestures into rhythmic forms. These acts of accumulation illustrate the cycles of creation that connect enduring traditions with contemporary expressions, inviting viewers to engage with how abstraction informs memory, material and movement. youraga.ca

Ongoing Interglacial by environmental artist and advocate Desirée Patterson examines the present as a critical moment in history, one in which the global climate crisis puts the future well-being of our planet in the balance. Informed by collaborations with eminent Canadian environmental scientists and policy advisors developed through her year-long affiliation as Artist-in-Residence with the UN International Year of Glaciers' Preservation. Patterson is presenting five ambitious new bodies of work that translate complex environmental scientific data into multisensory experiences aiming to champion science as the most viable source of climate hope. Lens-based and lensless photographic imagery is transformed into monumental sculptures and immersive installations that transport us to remote natural environments calling for our care.

Sacred Forms: Paintings by Cathy Key, Sculptures by Louise Solecki Weir

COWICHAN PUBLIC ART GALLERY, Duncan BC – To Jan 16, 2027

Cathy Key, Fertile Ground, 2026, mixed media

by Michael Turner

The English word "sacred" has its roots in the Latin sacer, meaning "set apart," "consecrated" or "holy," taking a more specific turn in the 1550s, when its meaning expanded to include anything worthy of great respect, reverence or protection. For Sacred Forms artists Cathy Key and Louise Solecki Weir, the sacred, as expressed in their co-written statement, traces "the relationship between the human psyche, the living world and the unseen dimensions that shape our experience."

Fertile Ground (2026) is one of eight mixed-media paintings Key has contributed to the exhibition. Here, the artist uses a range of earth tones associated with the Old Masters painting style to produce a portrait that recalls the work of da Vinci, Caravaggio and Rembrandt, though the subject seems more modern. There are no hints as to the age, gender, family relation or occupation of this subject, only the appearance of someone embodying a bygone era, much like the garland-clad, "Arcadian" models German photographer Wilhelm von Gloeden staged and captured in early 20th-century Taormina, Sicily.

Of Weir's 12 ceramic sculptures, Lullaby for Earth and Sky, Opus 8 (2023) is most striking, a recipient of the National Sculpture Society Gold Medal/Charlotte Geffken Prize. The subject is an infant, eyes closed, emerging from an abstract tricoloured form reminiscent of a swaddling cloth or the body of a bird. "Children are born with a purity and unique purpose that can be viewed as cosmic wisdom," says Weir. "I felt compelled to do this sculpture and loved the outcome."

Landon Mackenzie: Weather Patterns. Looking at the dotted sandstone-inspired canvases, you might see a charged nervous system, a celestial body or the microcosm of a riverbed's speckled surface. The depth of each painting by Vancouver-based Landon Mackenzie reveals the linen canvas as a site-responsive material that soaks up its environment: saltwater, sunshine, wind, rain, dew and starry nights. To begin this bi-coastal project, Mackenzie stapled the river-soaked linen to a wooden porch on Prince Edward Island, then rolled and shipped the work like a tapestry to her Vancouver studio, where she responded to the transformed surface. Each painting was enlivened from its interaction with East Coast summer tides before coalescing in the artist's West Coast studio.

ALL THAT YOU CHANGE CHANGES YOU: LAURA ST. PIERRE
Kamloops Art Gallery, Kamloops. To Jan 9, 2027
Taking its title from the opening of Octavia Butler's 1993 novel Parable of the Sower, this exhibition brings together work made by Laura St. Pierre over the past decade, all of it focused on an environmentally destabilized future transformed by loss and innovation. A notable work is Spectral Garden II (2018), a video installation that has viewers immersed in projections of a slowly rotating, submerged makeshift garden lit by off-screen flames. Accompanying the garden are photographs of other "specimens" and detritus collected by "The Scavenger." kag.bc.ca

Fern Helfand, Burnt Forest #1, 2023/2026, digital print mounted on aluminum composite panel

by Michael Turner

Fern Helfand's recent body of work began in 2023, after the artist entered a fire-scarred forest near her West Kelowna home. Rather than a ruin, Helfand experienced the quiet beauty of charred trees, seeing in them not a loss but a transformation–similar to the way a fallen tree rises again as a carved pole (an instance of nature passing through, and into, culture). In her current exhibition, Helfand combines photography, moving imagery and ceramic sculpture to highlight the "visual complexity" that emerges after natural forms are stripped bare.

Like the photographs in her 2021 exhibition Timber, Lumber, Wood, Home at the Grand Forks Art Gallery, Helfand's photographs begin as landscapes, only to be transformed through digital (montage) processes from documentarian subjects to uncanny works of art. Yet where the photos in Timber, Lumber, Wood, Home spanned the transformation of the tree through a cultural process that begins in the forest and ends as a house, the trees in Forest appear more distinct from each other after they are scorched. Here, the uncanny is first brought about through wildfire, to be completed later by the artist's hand.

Accompanying Helfand's photographs and moving imagery are ceramic works derived from sections of boughs, stumps and tree trunks. These sections vary in colour, from living tones of light brown and yellow to expired ones of black and white. Taken together, the combination of sculpture and photography deepens the viewing experience, much like the bound stack of finished two-by-fours did in concert with the photos of Timber, Lumber, Wood, Home.

Lyle Wilson: Full Circle

INUIT GALLERY OF VANCOUVER, North Vancouver BC – Nov 7 – 27

Lyle Wilson, Mourning, 2026, maple

by Julie Chadwick

As a genre-bending, multidisciplinary artist, Lyle Wilson has always been one to push boundaries. A Haisla carver with exceptional skills in mediums such as wood, gold, ivory and bone, Wilson also has impeccable lines as a painter and printmaker. His work pulls together elements of traditional Haisla art and more contemporary influences in a style that is entirely his own.

"I had a couple of Northwest Coast artists who showed me a couple of things, but I never actually mentored with anybody," Wilson told Preview. "I've been picking up tips from Native artists, Chinese artists, Japanese artists, white artists—plenty of them. I just do what interests me."

Wilson's latest exhibition at the Inuit Gallery of Vancouver, which runs through November, showcases in 52 works his broad artistic range, his attention to detail and his innovative interpretations of Haisla artistic traditions. Wilson said he had started many different projects over the years that were put aside and never finished. "The last couple of years, I basically decided I would finish as many as I possibly could and then make a solo exhibition out of it."

Growing up in Kitimaat Village, Wilson was always conscious of Haisla art—his uncle is master carver Sammy Robinson—but he developed his own unique style while pursuing an art education at the University of British Columbia and Emily Carr College of Art + Design.

More recently, Wilson has become interested in the historical circumstances of endangered languages on the Northwest Coast and the various initiatives to revive endangered languages. "I have a commonality with a lot of Native people that their language is basically endangered. Hasn't been taught the way naturally, now they're trying to revive it," he said.

Lyle Wilson, Raven and the 1st Men Overlooking Wreck Beach, 2026, silver, yellow cedar

He has begun to incorporate these influences into his art. The most recent iteration is Mourning, a mask in the exhibition that features painted greetings from different major language groups all along the Northwest Coast—Haida, Tsimshian, Tlingit, Nuxalk, Tahltan, Nuu-chah-nulth, Hul'q'umi'num' and more. "They're all sort of similar because they're very close together, but they're all different," he said.

GRAND FORKS ART GALLERY, Grand Forks BC – Salon Libre Nov 21, 2026 – Jan 9, 2027

Students of SD 51 display their creativity layer by layer in a collaborative art project called LAYERCAKE

by Michael Turner

Last summer, Preview visited Grand Forks Art Gallery, where we met with director/curator Jon Worth and saw young artists engaged in a studio setting. Below are excerpts from a more recent conversation:

Preview: You began your art career as a studio practitioner and started at GFAG in a communications role before taking up your current position. How has your journey influenced your vision as a director/curator?

Jon Worth: I studied economics at the University of Manitoba and UBC, print production at Vancouver Community College and fine art at Emily Carr. Over the next 25-plus years, I worked with large corporations. During this period, I carried my own studio spaces in Vancouver. I also travelled extensively, visiting museums and galleries around the world.

Preview: Your annual open call juried exhibition, Salon Libre, invites artists from across the Kootenay-Boundary region. You've mentioned you were lining up studio visits, some of them far afield. Are you looking for anything in particular?

Worth: I want to find artists who can move minds and hearts and push conversations forward, sometimes in unexpected places. That means stepping outside the usual networks but still paying attention to them. Culture is found across a broad base.... I want to hear voices that aren't always given a platform. The same idea informs how we work with young people. Through our connection with School District 51, we bring children into large-scale studio experiences and show them their ideas can fill a gallery, not just a notebook margin.

Worth's engagement with SD 51 can be seen in LAYERCAKE, a multi-week collaborative art project involving 600 students that took place in the gallery during fall 2025. Using colour paints, markers, pastels and more, students of all ages pursued their own projects while contributing to a larger collective work. Once the artwork was completed, local tradespeople assisted students to reorient the large swaths of canvas on the walls into individual pieces that were then displayed in the very place in which they were created.

RICHARD BARNES | MARBLE MOUNTAIN: EXCAVATION AND THE SUBLIME
Bau-Xi Gallery, Vancouver. Nov 7 – 28
For the past four years, Richard Barnes has been capturing pictures of the marble quarries of northern Italy. The results are jaw-dropping, bringing to mind everything from medieval European Gothic cathedral-style architecture to Piet Mondrian's early Cubist paintings. Not lost on the photographer is the effect extractive mining practices have had on the Apuan Alps. As Barnes writes in his artist's statement: "To say that this landscape has been scoured and abraded, sometimes beyond recognition, would be an understatement."

by Michael Turner

The two not unrelated exhibitions that make up the Gibson's current program take music as their point of departure. Begin Anywhere is an overdue appreciation of the work of the late electro-acoustic composer and SFU professor Martin Bartlett (1939–1993), while Here to Play features the work of eight artists—Raymond Boisjoly, Steven Brekelmans, Amber Frid-Jimenez, Rodney Graham, Carole Itter, Khan Lee, Lauraine Mak and Kathy Slade—in a range of media, including painting, sculpture, photography, print and textiles.

Begin Anywhere comprises machines (synthesizers), materials (musical scores), artifacts and organizations created by Bartlett over the course of his professional life—from his MA thesis (Mills College, 1968) to his co-founding of the Western Front artist-run centre in 1973 to his founding of the Vancouver Community Gamelan in 1986 to his last compositions, completed before his death from AIDS-related complications. "One of the unique qualities of music," wrote Bartlett in a 1972 Canada Council grant report, "is that it doesn't hang around, taking up space. The moment passes, the forms dissolve, the energy is released and sound sinks back into silence."

A key work in Here to Play is Rodney Graham's large-scale photo triptych 3 Musicians (Members of the Early Music Group "Renaissance Fare" Performing Matteo of Perugia's Le greygnour bien at the Unitarian Church of Vancouver, Late September, 1977) (2006). A recent acquisition of the SFU Art Collection, 3 Musicians inspired students participating in the Gibson's Spring 2026 Curatorial Practicum Cohort to gather artworks by local artists who, like Graham, merge concepts and materials, often to humorous effect.

This year, Art Works Gallery is celebrating its 40th anniversary with Encore, marking four decades of supporting artists, connecting people with original art, and contributing to Vancouver's creative identity. Founded by Deanna Geisheimer, Art Works has remained an independent, woman-owned business through many challenges facing brick-and-mortar galleries in an increasingly digital world. The survival of an independent gallery for 40 years is a remarkable achievement. It represents a commitment to culture in a city where maintaining creative spaces is increasingly difficult. The story of Art Works is about celebrating a milestone and acknowledging a local business that has quietly contributed to the city's artistic community for four decades and continues to do so today.

Lam Tung Pang: Out of This World

RICHMOND ART GALLERY, Richmond BC – To Jan 2, 2027

Lam Tung Pang, Guest Room Theatre (detail), 2026, multimedia installation

by Michael Turner

Out of This World is a site-specific installation focused on artist Lam Tung Pang's experiences in the Pacific Northwest after moving to Richmond, BC, from Hong Kong three-and-a-half years ago, at the age of 45. The installation consists of drawing, sculpture, video, slides and overhead projection and features a body of recurrent imagery, with an emphasis on the Canadian landscape, domestic interiors and outer space. Although Lam has been working worldwide for a number of years, Out of This World is his first solo exhibition in Canada.

"After deciding to leave Hong Kong for Richmond, Tung Pang delved into the experience of migration as an opportunity to evolve, change, grow," says Zoë Chan, Richmond Art Gallery curator. "He's had a peripatetic life. He's not sentimental or interested in searching for his roots or a sense of belonging. These works are a reflection of his desire to understand how his sense of self changes as he moves between places. His project is profoundly existential in nature and explores the migrant's inevitable feelings of alienation and vulnerability. But at the same time, he brings an irresistible sense of play and imagination to the work, so it never feels heavy."

An essential element in Lam's work, the tie that binds his installations, is light—specifically, the interplay of light and shadow. For Out of This World, Lam uses not only projectors but also lamps purchased from Richmond residents on Facebook Marketplace. A further refinement concerns the artist's canny use of analogue and digital light formats to affect our sense of belonging and displacement when moving though the installation.

To Dec 12 One hundred more is an exhibition and residency with dancer and visual artist Justine A. Chambers. The project builds on the iterative nature of One hundred more (2024), originally conceived by Chambers and Laurie Young as a live performance in 2019 and later reimagined by Chambers as a video installation for the 2024 Toronto Biennial of Art. In this choreographic work, Chambers and Young–both women of colour and mothers–centre minor gestures as modes of resistance, drawing on influences from contemporary social movements including Black Lives Matter. Their collaboration examines how subtle, embodied actions can shift dominant systems of value by engaging the body as a site of political, social and physical meaning.

The name "Ukama", an African word meaning the bonds that unite families, reflects our mission to foster connection through art. Whether you're an avid collector or discovering art for the first time, Ukama Gallery invites you to share in the spirit of creativity and cultural exchange.

S F Ho: Triple Burner Flower Field

SURREY ART GALLERY, Surrey BC – To Dec 6

S F Ho, Triple Burner Flower Field (detail), 2025, clay, acupuncture needles, yarrow

by Michael Turner

At the centre of multidisciplinary artist S F Ho's exhibition is Triple Burner Flower Field, a clay floor sculpture placed in a spiral shape that refers to the oracle bone character for 回, the Chinese character for "return to." Surrounding the sculpture are silk banners hand-dyed with tea and yarrow. Printed on the banners is the oracle bone character. Taken together, the installation is a looping system that recalls the plant origins of the characters that became Chinese script.

Ho, whose family background is in Traditional Chinese Medicine, has this to say about their work: "The exhibition points to a holistic way of understanding the micro- and macrocosmic dimensions of the social and corporeal body. Medicinal processes are externalized into structures and systems as metaphors of how we can sustain the land that sustains us." This in contrast to a Western medical system whose tendency has been to treat the symptom, not the root cause.

In their bio, Ho self-identifies as "a porous object" living "on the unceded territories of the xʷməθkʷəy̓əm, Sḵwx̱wú7mesh, and sə̓lílwətaʔɬ peoples. Operating somewhere between words and whatever words can't be, their work is sustained through feminist methodologies, land-based practices, and grassroots community networks." Ho has presented art through SFU Galleries, Hangar (Lisbon), Art Metropole (Toronto), Agnes Etherington Art Centre (Kingston, ON), Galerie oqbo (Berlin), RAM galleri (Oslo), Western Front (Vancouver), the University of Toronto's Justina M. Barnicke Gallery, the Vancouver Art Gallery and Oxygen Art Centre (Nelson). They published a book about love and aliens called George the Parasite.

Saodat Ismailova, To the Throat of the Sun, 2026, video still

OTHER LIGHT: SAODAT ISMAILOVA
Western Front, Vancouver. To Nov 28
Saodat Ismailova is a filmmaker and artist based between France and Uzbekistan, where she was raised in the years following the Soviet occupation. For Other Light, Ismailova presents two films in a site-specific installation—Melted into the Sun (2024) and To the Throat of the Sun (2026). Grounded in the layered histories of Central Asia, these films mine oral tradition and world views as systems through which ancestral knowledge is transmitted to future generations, despite political, economic and environmental upheavals. westernfront.ca

VANCOUVER

To Nov 28 Saodat Ismailova: Other Light. Uzbek artist Saodat Ismailova presents two films, Melted into the Sun (2024) and To the Throat of the Sun (2026), exploring light as a political and spiritual force through which history, memory, and myth are remade. Opening Jan 16, 2027 Scott Kemp and Jenine Marsh: In Lieu of Flowers. New works by Vancouver-based Kemp and Toronto-based Marsh bring together moving image, sculpture and installation. Kemp's meditations on natural burials and Marsh's provisional fountains for wishing coins consider alternative offerings, revealing the contradictions when our existential desires become entangled with capital. Substitutions, disordered temporalities and material breakdowns give rise to new cycles that break the promises of the monumental. Follow @western_front on Instagram.

BRITISH COLUMBIA – Audain Prize for the Visual Arts

Steven Shearer (b. 1968) is this year's recipient of the $100,000 Audain Prize. A maker of paintings, sculptures, texts and collages, the Vancouver-based artist has participated in numerous high-profile international exhibitions and is widely collected. Shy and elusive, he is not known for sharing much about his life and work. In a May 29, 2026, interview with the Guardian, he revealed, "All the hope or will to be able to communicate kind of goes into the pictures. And I try to stay out of the way once that's happened." MT

To Dec 12 Angela Grossmann: Unfolding. Grossmann paints from an interior record where memory, emotion and line precede narrative. The human figure continually reasserts itself–partial, unstable and deeply present. Her work begins with a contour, a trace that feels discovered rather than constructed. The figures that emerge hover between presence and erasure, suspended in a space where identity is suggested but never fully secured. Grossmann's figures are not portraits, but fragile, unresolved beings perpetually in the process of becoming or disappearing. It is in this pendulous space between articulation and disappearance that her figures feel most alive. They're unfolding. This exhibition is generously supported by the Audain Foundation and Equinox Gallery.

RAJKAMAL KAHLON: ARE MY HANDS CLEAN?
Western Gallery & Sculpture Collection, Bellingham. To Jan 23, 2027
South Asian American artist Rajkamal Kahlon challenges Western knowledge production and recovers the humanity of anonymous women from early 20th-century anthropological books. She then physically intervenes in the materials by disassembling, enlarging and overpainting. Her subversive and colorful interventions address political violence by re-dressing the women in outfits inspired by radical feminists and revolutionaries. She also arms them with grenades, machine guns and machetes so they can fight back against their oppressors. Kahlon's profound relationship to trauma and resilience stems from her own remarkable life story. westerngallery.wwu.edu

SURGE: A GEOGRAPHY OF FLOW

Museum of Northwest Art, La Conner. To Jan 10, 2027

This triennial exhibition pairs regional creators with climate scientists to examine how environmental shifts reshape communities. Inspired by peer-reviewed research and recent local flooding, the collaborative installations dive deep into coastal hydrology, forest ecology and wildfire science with striking visual urgency. Guest-curated by Chloe Dye Sherpe, the exhibition includes a diversity of materials and practices. A crinkly silver survival suit, a mixed-media panel filled with vibrant marine flora, and a red neon fire line cutting through a charred forest create compelling juxtapositions for regional dialogue.

Zoe Dusanne: The Art of Seeing

CASCADIA ART MUSEUM, Edmonds WA – To Jan 3, 2027

by Matthew Kangas

Mary Bass Bayley, Untitled, c. 1950–55, gouache and pencil on paper. Collection of the Bayley Family

In a fresh museum iteration of her art collection, Zoe Dusanne: The Art of Seeing at Cascadia Art Museum takes a different tack. Instead of highlighting the big-name New York and European icons of 20th-century art Dusanne brought to Seattle through her extensive personal contacts, curator David F. Martin has narrowed his focus to two other areas: unknown women artists and Japanese American artists championed by Dusanne. The results spotlight artists of the Pacific Northwest–Seattle area and bolster Dusanne's position as the leading modern art dealer of the period, one who paid attention to local talent too.

Dusanne was not the first—or last—modern art dealer in Seattle. Others were Francine Seders, Otto Seligman, Henriette Woessner and Gordon Woodside. However, her personal charisma and financial support of the artists in lieu of collector enthusiasm are worthy of note. Both Seattle Art Museum and the Henry Art Gallery of the University of Washington requested to show her collection, to which she readily agreed.

After the incarcerations of Japanese American artists during World War II, Dusanne went out of her way to exhibit the crucial four who returned to Seattle (some never returned): Paul Horiuchi, John Matsudaira, Kenjiro Nomura and George Tsutakawa, who worked in the US Army as a translator. Their paintings form the high-water mark of the exhibition and constitute the postwar arrival of gestural, geometric and hard-edge abstraction to the city.

Among the women, few of whom are remembered today, Martin makes a strong case for Virginia Banks, Mary Bass Bayley, Louise Lewis Gilbert, Vera Haller, Beulah Loomis Hyde and Jeannette Jackson Murphy. Their varied approaches to abstraction confirm how artists geographically distant from New York could still have something to say and convey their own visions.

FULGENCIO LAZO | ILUMINANDO CAMINOS [LIGHTING THE WAY]
ArtX Contemporary, Seattle. To Nov 14
Oaxacan American artist Fulgencio Lazo displays vibrant, rhythmic compositions, "looking to cultural memory, community, and connection as sources of resilience and light." Lazo has won numerous public art competitions, been acquired by prestigious art museums and exhibited widely. The brightly colored passages, intertwining linear patterns and swirling shapes in his abstract paintings reflect his inner vision as well as his Zapotec heritage. Alongside this show, Lazo's tapete installation celebrating Día de los Muertos is on view at the Seattle Art Museum until Jan 11, 2027.

An Indigenous Present

FRYE ART MUSEUM, Seattle WA – Nov 7, 2026 – Feb 14, 2027

Sky Hopinka, Mnemonics of Shape and Reason, 2021, still, HD video (stereo; color; 4:13 minutes)

by Susan Kunimatsu

From the arrival of Europeans until the mid-20th century, the policy of colonial, US and Canadian governments was the displacement and extermination of North America's Native peoples. Beginning with the American Indian Movement, part of the civil rights activism of the 1970s, Native Americans have been fighting to reclaim their lands and revitalize their cultures. Traditional crafts are now recognized as living art forms, not artifacts. Native artists have gained prominence in mainstream contemporary art, using and reshaping it to tell their own stories.

In 2023, artist Jeffrey Gibson (Choctaw/Cherokee) and curator Jenelle Porter produced An Indigenous Present, a groundbreaking volume surveying 100 years of work by over 60 contemporary Indigenous North American artists working in a range of nontraditional media and genres. Last year they selected works by 15 artists from that survey for a show organized by the Institute of Contemporary Art/Boston.

"Present" is the operative word in An Indigenous Present: artists working in contemporary styles and materials, using abstraction to convey stories and sense of place. George Morrison (Ojibwe) established himself as a prominent Abstract Expressionist in New York before returning to his native Minnesota. His 1962 painting (Untitled) renders the colors of a Midwest landscape in jagged brushstrokes reminiscent of Mark Rothko. Teresa Baker (Mandan/Hidatsa) combines natural and synthetic materials in a collage evoking both a traditional weaving and a landscape crossed by railroad tracks. Sky Hopinka (Ho-Chunk Nation) uses video to dissolve images of Southwestern red rock canyons into color fields. All offer arresting visions of their land. Throughout the show, works by little-known or emerging artists are juxtaposed with the more famous, highlighting connections between generations and the continuum of cultural traditions.

In his introduction to the book, Gibson described what unites their work: "Some of these artists have been working for decades, and I follow in their path; others are at an earlier stage in their career, and I see new routes and possibilities in their respective practices. Together, they are amplifying the histories that have come before them and building a new context for present and future artists."

ROBERT GAMBLIN: MEDITATIONS ON A COASTAL LANDSCAPE
Waterstone Gallery, Portland. Nov 5 – 29
New gallery member Robert Gamblin shows oil paintings of the forest, estuary, ocean and sky of the Cascade Head Biosphere Reserve. A colorist who "sometimes shocks, sometimes soothes," he shares a kinship with the late 19th-century Symbolists, using the landscape to explore the inner emotional states it prompts rather than to describe it literally. "All of my paintings reach for the transcendent using the emotional voice of color to do the speaking," says Gamblin. "Every color we encounter vibrates with a unique energy that carries/is an emotional communication." Opening reception First Thursday, Nov 5, 5 to 8 pm. Artist talk Nov 15, 11 am. waterstonegallery.com

Anish Kapoor: Dissolving Margins

JORDAN SCHNITZER MUSEUM OF ART at PSU, Portland OR – To Dec 5

Anish Kapoor, Shadow, 2007, polymer gravure etching, edition 21/35, published by Paragon Press, London. Collection of Jordan D. Schnitzer, © Anish Kapoor. All rights reserved, DACS, London / ARS, NY 2026

by Joseph Gallivan

British artist Anish Kapoor hit peak popularity with his sculpture Cloud Gate (2004) in Chicago's Millennium Park, the silvery bean that is perfect for selfies, and peak controversy in 2016 when he became the only artist licensed to use the "blackest black" paint called Vantablack (since superseded). But the sculptor has a long career as a printmaker, and Jordan Schnitzer is a big collector.

Anish Kapoor: Dissolving Margins, from the Collections of Jordan D. Schnitzer and His Family Foundation explores nearly four decades of Kapoor's printmaking practice. Here you can see the editions that Schnitzer swoons over: so many mesmerizing pools of color with hard-to-define edges, which seem to breathe or vibrate.

Born in 1954 in Mumbai, India, Kapoor moved to London in the early 1970s to study art. In one of his breakthrough series, 1000 Names, he sprinkled pigment powder on oddly shaped cones, pyramids and other shapes. He also added the vivid matte powder to the floor around the shapes so they seemed to float.

As he matured, his sculptures became bigger and more extreme, evoking blood, viscera and sex organs. His prints are a welcome relief from all that. They still show a fascination with color, as though he is searching for the purest pink or princeliest purple. Here we see organic forms that could be high-altitude clouds, jellyfish or muscle mass. The gallery shows black-and-white prints of the same forms next to the color versions, inviting the eye to dart and the mind to play a memory game, of which piece goes where.

The works are stylishly presented by Schnitzer's foundation. Several huge folded pieces are in shadow boxes, where the deep crevice of a book spine holds the deepest pigment. With over 150 unique impressions, from his earliest experiments to his most recent work, this is Kapoor's first retrospective survey dedicated to prints. Catch them before they vanish.

WEAVING TIME: NUNO – TEXTILES OF TRADITION AND TRANSFORMATION
Portland Japanese Garden, Portland. To Feb 14, 2027
Portland Japanese Garden has a knack for staging shows that link Japan's modern and traditional aesthetics in a super calm environment that invites contemplation. This exhibition looks at NUNO ("cloth" in Japanese), the Japanese textile design studio led by designer Reiko Sudō. It presents fabrics made across eight regions of Japan, highlighting the small community makers behind them. Dangling from the ceiling, slowly turning cubes allow the viewer to get up close to the fabric design and textures, and a hands-on touch wall invites visitors to rethink their relationship to cloth. A collaboration with woodworker Chuzo Tozawa offers classically inspired folding screens.

Two exhibitions explore the visual life of Had Gadya, the cumulative Passover song known as "One Little Goat."
Ongoing Had Gadya: The Art of One Little Goat gathers Haggadot, manuscripts, and artworks from varied periods and traditions, including by Ben Shahn, revealing how artists and Jewish communities have reimagined the song's chain of characters across centuries. Frank Stella: Had Gadya presents twelve prints created between 1982 and 1984, inspired by El Lissitzky's 1919 illustrations. Through vivid color, layered forms, printmaking, collage, and hand-coloring, Stella translated the song's characters and conflict into abstraction. The exhibition traces the visual conversation between these artists, revealing how shape, color, and movement bring new expression to a familiar story across generations and traditions.

Noah Alexander Isaac Stein, Creator God / Dead Raven at the Trans-Alaska Pipeline / Trickster, 2026

NOAH ALEXANDER ISAAC STEIN: THE WILD DARK
Blackfish Gallery, Portland. Dec 1, 2026 – Jan 2, 2027
Noah Stein's semi-abstract oil paintings ask how darkness can be integrated into modern life. Political and environmental discord becomes the catalyst for transcendence. The self-taught artist also makes large-scale light installations. Stein is "exploring the intersection of spiritual understanding with the undercurrents of an increasingly turbulent present," and his recent work has taken a turn from internal to external discord. Aiming for synthesis, writes Blackfish, Stein's works "are intended to guide viewers towards their own encounters with ineffable oneness."

RAVEN TRANSFORMS: THE HAIDA ARGILLITE ART OF KIHL'YAHDA CHRISTIAN WHITE features nearly 200 argillite works from the multidisciplinary master carver and artist's prolific 50-year carving career. Though White uses a broad range of materials, Raven Transforms zeroes in on his extensive work in black argillite, a fine-grained type of slate found in his home territory of Haida Gwaii. White's intricate argillite carvings "redefine the form," the book states, and this is clearly illustrated in the wealth of richly detailed photos found throughout its pages.

ANGELA GROSSMANN: UNFOLDING. Launched at the opening of Grossmann's October 2026 Unfolding survey at the West Vancouver Art Museum (to Dec 12), this exhibition catalogue contains essays by three Vancouver-based writers—Robin Laurence, Monika Szewczyk and Michael Turner. The book covers various aspects of the London-born artist's life prior to her arrival in Vancouver in 1980, her sudden rise as a generational painter with Neo-Expressionist tendencies, and her subsequent work in collage and hybrid photo-paintings.

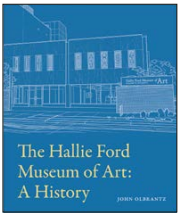

Hardcover, 110 pp. C$55
Available at the West Vancouver Art Museum Gallery Store, 604-925-7295.

GENRES HIGH AND LOW: WRITINGS ON ART. Though billed as a career-long collection of writing by Toronto-based writer-curator Philip Monk, Genres High and Low is also the story of a young man who arrives in the big city with the intention of becoming a freelance art critic, only to find himself shunned a few years later by the vanguardist community that drew him there. Rather than wholesale banishment, he is offered a more lucrative job as curator and then gallery director. A must-read for those interested in contemporary art and its worlds.

Hardcover, 476 pp. C$45.
Available through bookstores and online at gooselane.com.

THE HALLIE FORD MUSEUM OF ART: A HISTORY, by founding director John Olbrantz, tells the full story of one of the youngest academic art museums on the West Coast. Its roots go back to the founding of Willamette University in 1842, and Olbrantz's lively tales include Methodist missionaries, early art teachers, German spies, French generals, RAF pilots, eccentric collectors and visionary donors. Olbrantz is a specialist in ancient and American art, including the art and architecture of Roman Britain, Roman mosaics from Syria and the history of American Egyptology.
